

DEMOCRACY AND ISSUE OF SECURITY

Zoran Avramović

Summary: In this paper, the author critically discusses the problem between democratic system and security dilemmas from the perspective of the globalization of democracy and modern forms of crisis. Democracy is a fragile order in interior and international terms. Powerful states are forcing the new concept of national security through creating a system of collective security (NATO). On the other hand, in a national democratic state, security policy is facing expansion of deviant individual and social behaviour. In terms of personal safety, this issue emerges as tension between democratic order and expansion of individual rights and freedoms. Numerous human rights limit security competence of the state. The future of a state in the global democracy is uncertain and unpredictable.
