

DETECTIVE BUSINESS IN SERBIA TOWARDS A NEW LEGAL SOLUTIONS

Ivan Joksić

Summary: We see that as part of the overall privatization process in Serbia and has been a privatization of the provision of detective services. As a reminder, the legal acts that regulate the areas of security, such as the Law on social self-protection, have long since ceased to exist. In addition, starting from 1993. in Serbia, are still not adopted a specific and comprehensive piece of legislation regulating the field of private security and detective services. In fact, the detective business in Serbia is an area that is not legally regulated in terms of passing laws and related regulations. In late 2011. the Government of the Republic of Serbia adopted the parliamentary procedure in further forwarded the draft Law on Detective Activity with appropriate explanation. In fact, the social scene in Serbia there is a kind of paradox, because instead of laws prior to the arrangement of certain social relations, in this case, laws are late more than a decade, a business that should govern the “regular” holds. Although, according to academics Radomir Lukic, inventive life of law, it seems that these cases show the extent to which it is received alarming proportions. The author will, in accordance with the current situation in Serbia, made up to present basic provisions of the Draft Law on Detective Activity respecting, at the same time, criticism of the professional public. In the central part of the paper will discuss the legal requirements, procedures for obtaining licenses and the manner of the detective business. During the presentation will point to the similarities and differences with the state legal solutions in the immediate environment (the Republic of Serbian and Montenegro).
